

Simon Jankelson is Social Entrepreneur, Program Manager, Musician, Music Facilitator and Speaker. Simon deeply believes in the power of music to create social impact and change.

As founder of The Human Sound Project, Simon travels the world empowering people regardless of their musical experience - to come together and collaboratively create and record original songs that share their stories. Simon is also the national music program manager for the charity A Sound Life - in this role Simon trains musicians to become community music leaders, guiding them as they share the power of their music with the most vulnerable Australians that need including to children in hospital, disability centres, aged care and more.

Simon has spoken on Channel 10, TEDx events, VIVID Sydney and was named on 40 UNDER 40's list of future leaders of the Asia's design industry. He is also an award winning musician having written albums produced by Bob Clearmountain (Rolling Stones, Radiohead) in Los Angeles and released by Universal records.

Simon has developed and delivered acclaimed interactive music programs to over 180 corporate and community organisations across the globe reaching groups from Vodafone in Sydney to Israeli and Palestinian young leaders in Jerusalem. Through his travels and deep experience in the field, Simon has experienced first hand the ways that music can unite groups, uplift people and create a more inclusive world.